

Foreseen Resolutions in UNHRC

As the conference winds down and the delegates tirelessly continue to debate and resolutions continue to slowly develop and gain more specifics. The delegates in the senior school UNHRC committee have developed two promising resolutions and are working towards eventually proposing these well thought out and intellectual papers.

The bloc containing the UK and the US are proposing an interesting resolution on implementing human rights for all, primarily including criminals. They are suggesting independent funding from delegates' own countries that can be controlled and thoroughly regulated to combat these human rights issues in prisons. This bloc believes in placing full focus and concern on combating human rights violations in prison and allowing prisoners full access to adequate rights.

The counter bloc including Iran and others, has formed a different perspective including allowing funding and support from only developed and wealthier countries to implement human rights in prison. Although, the delegation of the UK pointed out that countries receiving this funding cannot regulate and control the money source and will ultimately leave countries unstable and somewhat unprotected.

The UK later interestingly stated that the two resolution papers are "polar opposites" and eventually will cause a problem as the delegates try to commit to one of these papers. The delegate also stated that instead of ultimately supporting completely differing stances, the resolution paper sponsors should further work towards incorporating, compromising, and relating these two resolution papers together. Although this is what the UK projected strongly, the actual differences between these two papers were difficult to find.

Conclusively, the next hour should bring huge compromise and problem-solving from both blocs and obvious adaptations to both resolution papers. All eyes will be on the senior school UNHRC as they come to a much-needed resolution to the demanding problem of human rights in prisons.
